Podcast Interview by John Vogel

Exploring the Balancing Act of Family and Art

Editor's Note: In December 2022, Talking Writing art director John Vogel interviewed poet, writer, and editor Kelli Russell Agodon. The conversation was conducted over Zoom, with Kelli in her writing shed in Washington state and John in his basement studio in Philadelphia. The two discussed their ability to create art while raising their children—hence the tucked-away interviewing spaces.

Kelli (she/her) is the author of four poetry collections, including her most recent, Dialogues with Rising Tides, which was published by Copper Canyon Press in 2021. She is the co-founder of Two Sylvias Press and the co-director of Poets on the Coast: A Weekend Retreat for Women.

Dialogues with Rising Tides is described by Copper Canyon as “a humane and honest conversation with the forces that threaten to take us under.” Her poems explore the anxieties and heartbreaks of life—including environmental collapse, cruel politics, and the persistent specter of suicide. However, the poems are also peppered with emotional vulnerability and darkly sparkling humor. Rising Tides holds space for the complexity of conflicting feelings and the people with whom we share these feelings.

At the top of the episode, Kelli read “Slang for Long-Term Relationships,” which is the perfect segue into this year’s theme at Talking Writing: exploring the role of art in people’s relationships and how family members affect their work. As both parents and creatives, Kelli and John found common ground in sharing many of the same responsibilities and time constraints.
